

Figure 5.10: Student Example of Researcher's Field Journal

Focus: Learn to speak conversational Korean

Date	Research Experience	Descriptive Details	Reflective Details
1/3/2025	work on research questions	I went to the school library and met with the librarians to talk about which databases would be most helpful for my research focus and to develop my research questions. I found one interesting article about how technology is helpful for language acquisition, which led me to develop my first research question.	Even though I selected this focus area, finding articles that were easy to understand was more challenging than I realized. I ended up focusing on the abstract, introduction, literature review, and discussion sections of research articles, like we learned in class, to find additional ideas for research questions. Tomorrow, I plan to annotate the article I found and create a document with expert quotes that I want to use in my project.