“Included” Scenario Cards

Your crayon box is missing a red crayon, and you are invited to join the next table and use their crayon box.	You are feeling a bit sad, and your friends give you a hug and ask you to help with a jigsaw.
Someone knocks over a box of paper in the art room, and one person suggests the rest of the class all help to pick it up.	The hook you put your bag on is broken, and some of your friends suggest that you could use their hooks.
Five people need a seat, and there are only four chairs. One person suggests that two people can share one seat.	You are new to the school, and everyone is talking about a birthday party they are going to over the weekend. The day before the party you receive an invitation too.
A person in your class asks you to join their storytelling group.	You are playing alone in the playground, and someone asks you to join in their baseball game.
You feel sad, and someone in your class notices and tries to help you.	You are lonely at playtime, and a group of students asks you to join in a group.

You try to join in a game, but the students say there is not enough room for you to play.	A classmate asks to share your group’s pencils, and you say, “No, we are using them all.”
Your mom and dad take your brother to the movies but leave you at home with a babysitter.	You are asked to help carry sports equipment to the playground, but no one will let you help.
You are trying to see the farm animals at the school excursion, but no one will let you into the circle around the animals.	All the students in your class except you are invited to a birthday party.
You are not selected to sing in the school choir.	You are not picked by students to be on their team.
